KENTUCKY VOODOOISM

Supernatural Powers Credited to an Aged Negro There.

He Is No Older Looking Now than Twenty-Five Years Ago, and the Darkies Believe Him a Wizard.

Russellville, Ky., letter in New York Re-

Voodoo worship among the negroes of the South has been a prolific theme during the present century. Though the subject has not attracted as much attention since the abolition of slavery as when the congested districts were so conducive to the peculiar practice, those who have an idea that the missionary and the Emancipation Proclamation have caused the extinction of the poetic and picturesque principles of voodooism among the Southern negroes, can easily detect their error by careful investigation in those districts of the South in which the ex-slave population is numer-

On the high "Knobs," in the suburbs of this city, resides an able exponent of this craft. About the close of the war a powerfully built negro, calling himself Elisha Broadeaux, made his appearance in this vicinity. At that time he appeared to be about seventy years old, though as vigorous as a mule. He established himself in the small log but which he has occupied continuously since. At that time the negroes were just beginning to taste the sweets of freedom, and were enjoying the ite Persian greyhound lying with nose benovelty of visiting each other unrestrained. The new arrival immediately became a man of prominence in a peculiar way among the negroes of this entire section of the country. in their inability to pronounce the old negro's name, it was corrupted into "Lige Broad-Ax."

Before the old man had resided in the vicinity a year miraculous powers were attributed to him by the ignorant negroes. A few of the colored people were too intelligent to be deceived, but his influence with the majority was so great that these better informed were not anxious to assert their skepticism. To some Lige Broad-Ax was a voodoo doctor, and controlled life and death; to others he was the high priest of parted spirits. To all his race, with few exceptions, he was the embodiment of good and evil, as he preferred to exercise his influence, and a terror generally. He was never known to have done a day's work, yet he always appeared to have an abundance of food, though his clothes were of the poorest quality. In fact, it was asserted by negroes, in confidence, that the old voodoo doctor was dressed in a povetry-stricken manner from choice, in order to more easily terrify the ignorant class with whom he came in contact. Even to the white population "Uncle 'Lige," as he was commonly known, was always an enigma. In their presence he was universally polite and humble, though among his colored acquaintances arrogant and commanding. To the white children the aged negro was never known to be otherwise than kind, though the fear he inspired among the negroes by his reputation as a voodoo docter was shared in an exaggerated form by them. He was known. to do a heavy traffic in charms, amulets, etc., among the negroes.

THE VOODOO'S "SPELL." For the past quarter of a century the locality has been disturbed periodically by accusations against the old wizard by members of his race, who believed they had been placed under a "spell" for some fancled slight, or because he was paid to do so by their enemy. These complaints were of various forms. In one case the old negro's pretensions alleged that he had forced hin, to swallow a piece of a corn knife in his sleep. He could feel the point cutting its way through his flesh. He was examined by physicians and appeared to be suffering all the torments incident to the introduction of a metallic substance in the human stemach. After lingering several days in awful delirium, in which he repeatedly claimed that he had been "tricked by old 'Lige Broad Ax," the victim died. A post-mortem in-vestigation was made. The stomach was frightfully swollen and inflamed; but if, as was believed, the negro had been poisoned, the drug used was so subtle as to defy surgical skill to detect its presence. This only served to convince the negroes more thoroughly of the voodoo doctor's knowledge of the black art.

Though he has resided here more than a quarter of a century he has not perceptibly aged since he came. He is almost as vigorous now as when he first made his appearance in this locality. The best authorities agree that the old negro is more than one hundred years old. He is not positive as to his age. Familiarity with events early in the present century indicate that he was probably born in the last decade of the eighteenth century. He declares that he is 40 years of age, and that he will never die. having discovered the elixir of immortality. Many of the superstitious negroes assert that the secret of his longevity is that he occasionally takes the form of a vampire and repairs his shattered constitution with the blood of his younger victims.

A reporter visited the cabin of the alleged wizard last week to secure the aged ne-gro's photograph. He was invited into the small but by the old man, who received him pleasantly. The small room of the cabin was crowded with rubbish and a queer collection of dried vegetation. The proprietor sat in its midst, wearing a dilapidated old hat and other clothes to correspond. He was unusually communicative, but peculiarly guarded in his remarks at first. A remarkable feature of the conversation was the excellent language used by the old man one moment, while probably the next sentence would be expressed most ungrammatically. The negro dialect appeared to be forced, and he was apparently making a constant effort to conceal the polish and pure diction which he occasionally used.

PLACES HIS AGE AT 140. In appearance he was a puzzle. His good-natured, kindly old face was wreathed in wrinkles and furrowed even under his snowy beard. Small tufts of long white hair dotted his head, indicating the mixture of races in his veins. For two hours the voodoo doctor conversed on general topics, drifting from one subject to another with an ease that was most remarkable considering his surroundings. An effort to draw him into a discussion of voodoolsm appeared to annoy the old negro. He preferred to talk of religion, of the probabilities of a great war in the country, which he knew was impending. Yes, he would see it, because he would yet live a long time. No, he did not know his age, guessed he was 'most 140; was a grown man in New Orleans when Jackson defeated the British

The queer character was running along thus, apparently taking considerable satisfaction in recounting his experiences, when he was again reminded that he was widely known as a voodoo priest. The old man ceased speaking, and appeared to be in deep thought for several minutes. Suddenly he turned a most piercing black eye on the questioner. His face assumed a most peculiar expression. He began to speak rapidly, but with remarkable distinction. The dialect of his race was not blended with his Anglo-American pronunciation. "I am aware that some people accuse me of being a voodoo and declare that I prac-tice sorcery," he said. "I do not deny these charges. They are too numerous, even if I was so inclined. Am I to blame for these impressions? History presents no instance of any race in which pretenders to black art, or magic, have not existed. Ancients believed that all the planets in conjunction had peculiar effects on individuals. This was taught by their wisest and best men. Was this true? Was not the magi, the priestly class of the ancient Medians. honored? Were their ideas correct? Teachings of the Persian priesthood were similar to the magi, yet their learning benefited mankind. "I know something of occult properties, either medical or magical. I am familiar with the queer, creeping, crawling, walking and inanimate things common to the Southern forests. With the resinous and aromatic exudation of certain trees and shrubs I accomplish that which mystifies those who are ignorant of the subject. I am an alchemist in a rude way, yet when I demonstrate what my chemical investigation has taught me I am hooted by some as attempting to perpetuate voodoo worship.

That is self-sustaining, and my assistance "There was a time when I hoped to obtain more profitable results, not alone for myself, I have lived a long time. It is not good to boast of knowledge, but I have labored much to obtain learning. I know what I know, though I am credited with being aided by demons. In the light of modern science the most advanced learning innumerable generations is valueless, The knowledge of the present is yet to be subjected to the light of future learning. That alone will demonstrate the truth or faisity of the teaching of this century. am not satisfied with present judgment."

SARAH BERNHARDT'S HOUSE. Full of Costly and Luxurious Hangings-A Prosperous Woman.

sliver and gold.

What first strikes one on entering from the porte cochere is the profusion of rich and heavy hangings. One ascends thence five or six wide steps that face the door, and finds other hangings, not less rich and heavy, at the top. These portieres must be fearful microbe nests, since shaking and beating them often in the open air is impossible. If they were shaken and beaten within doors all the microbes in the dust would fall back on them. The walls are covered with prectous textiles. Whereever you see a door, there you see another pair of portieres. One has a vista of the salle a manger, and sees again a superfluity of curtains and tapestries. Mme. Bernhardt's maid, if you call in the morning, and a man servant, if you come in the afternoon, takes you to the end of the hall facing the dining room, and then down other steps into a lofty, spacious room, which may be greenhouse, studio, salon, tent, or all four, and is furnished a good deal as might have been the tent of some Mesopotamian King's daughter of the Abramical time, had it been possible for her to have filled it with palms and other tropical plants in Persian vases, portraits of herself by Gervex, Bastien Lepage, and a number of others not less well-known artists, busts (also of herself), couches draped with rare stuffs or warmed up with furs not less valuable, floor rugs of tiger, eopard and South Australian sheep skins, 'tokens of admiration' from princes and potentates, to make which exhausted the skill and fancy of artists who worked in

The mistress of the house looks as fresh as a rose, and tres avenante, a term that neither "gracious" nor "comely" nor "pleasant" will convey, though each of these words gets near it. She is stouter than she was when the portrait in front of which she stands was done of herself, and a favortween outstretched paws beside her. It is a singularly odd and interesting picture, and was a good likeness when taken, but is not now. The Journal Amusant parodied it as "a dog beside a bone." Sarah Bernhart was then at the Francais, and, worried by the tyranny of M. Perrin and the jealousy of her fellow-actors and actresses, who had been driven wild by the praises bestowed on her by Victor Hugo. She was also worried with creditors. But she has since, guided by her wandering instinct, found Eldorados and come back wealthy, healthy, and contented with the fruits of her long tours. Part of these fruits are a world-wide reputation. Every Australian, North or South American, New Zealander, Russian, Scandinavian, Austrian, Hungarian or Briton who has money to spend in going will want to spend an evening at La Renaissance, now that she is its manager. This she and M. Graux knew when they signed at Rio their deed of partnership which gives her the absolute management of the stage, a share in the profits proportionate to her deserts, a voice in the arrangements of the house, and the right, after consulting her associate and hearing what he has to say, in accepting or refusing plays and assigning the parts. This stage queen, whos transubstantiated Donna Sol, Marie de Neuburg, Theodora, Dora, Cleopatra, with Sarah Bernhardt pure et simple, is just on the stage what she is off it. but in the latter case has more good-natured suavity of manner. In private life she is not stagey, because not obliged to make her words and motions suit a given character. Those who live about and on her seem to be in clover. or she is profuse, though exacting of the work which servants, secretaries, dressmakers and so forth are employed to do. Her femme de chambre must be a woman of genius, for on her constantly devolves he task of revising and improving Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's tollets. The taste of the great actress is Oriental, and at variance with the taste of European ladies, in which there is a survival in the corset and stiff. straight-laced bodies of the coats of mail of by-gone days. The male European has dropped everything crustacean, but the female European clings to the outer shell which served as a personal defense from rough fingers in rude times, and was more useful than a veil to hide away plastic charms. Sarah Bernhardt instinctively drapes herself like an Eastern woman. She has the carriage of one descended from women who carried water in earthen vessels from wells. It is this erectness, which is not an effect of purpose, but of ancestral habits of the muscles, that makes the draperies of her soft robe de chambre fall so harmoniously. This garment is in silvery olue damask, edged everywhere, at neck, chest, down the diagonally closed front. and round the hem that touches the floor with a deep fluffy trimming, furnished doubtless by the marabout ostrich. As she turns round to take a chair the under trimmings of the skirt appear and answer. but in soft lawn, which is arranged in narrow and plain hemmed frills overlapping each other, to the depth perhaps of half a yard. Mme. Bernhardt has a lace scarf twisted round her head. Mme. Bernhardt vouchsafed some particulars about present occupations. She is fairly early riser, and likes pottering about in the morning, looking at her flowers, her pets, her laces, and what not, and then reading the letters delivered at 8 in the morning, marking the ones to be answered by her secretary. She lunches at 11:30, goes at 1 to La Renaissance, rehearses and attends to business until 5, dines in her dressing-room, and has two good hours pour faire la digestion before she goes on the stage. Her most trying task is the fitting on of dresses. It is impossible to get dressmakers-their eyes being vitiated by long habit of the corset, tight body and abrupt hip and dorsal curves-to follow properly the lines of the body, or to indicate them in seeming to well them. When a dress is a success several copies are taken of it. When "Les Rois" was being rehearsed Mme. Bernhardt and her company were at it every day from 2 to 5:30, and from 8:30 until 1 in the morning. HARRISON'S FOREIGN POLICY.

It Was That of a Patriot, and the Attempt to Disparage It Will Fail.

Washington Post (Ind.) Administration organs will take but little profit from their efforts to disparage the foreign policy of Mr. Harrison. There is nothing in that record of which the ex-President need be ashamed, or for which any American citizen of either party will find it necessary to apologize. The Post antagonized Mr. Harrison in many matters. We opposed the force bill in particular with all the energy at our com-

But in international affairs Mr. Harrison was a patriot at all times, and with him it was his country first. Some very grave and delicate questions presented themselves during his administration. The Italian lynching at New Orleans, the Chilian imbroglio, and the Bering sea affair were all of them fraught with momentous possibilities, yet in each case he reached an honorable conclusion without the smallest sacrifice of the national dignity. The Baltimore Sun has seen fit to say that "Mr. Harrison pottered with the Bering sea matter and got floored by the court of arbitration," but, had Mr. Harrison adopted the other alternative and defied England-an alternative which we infinitely preferred - the Sun would have been the first to denounce him as a bully and a mischief maker. is it true that Mr. Harrison was "floored" by the court. The United States did not gain a certain purely sentimental point, upon which, as a matter of fact, it should never have insisted, but in all practical respects the arbitration resulted favorably to us. We are in control of the seal fisheries, so far as the court could put us in control, and, for the rest, we have still the privilege of helping ourselves if interfered with or annoyed. In the Italian and Chilian affairs Mr. Harrison made it perfectly clear to the world at large that the ruling motive with him was the henor of his country and his flag. So far as he could practice consideration and friendly feeling toward foreign nations within the lines of his patriotism was anxious to do so, but no shadow o an apprehension as to what the outside world might think ever dimmed for one moment the luster of his love and purpose. He realized that he was at once the servant and the champion of the American people. He thought first of them and afterward of others. And that "Americanism" of his, at which certain organs are endeavoring to sneer, was the one feature of his administration which most endeared him to his fellow-citizens.

These organs had better ply their trade in some other direction. They will meet with no success in the attempt to magnify Mr. Cleveland's foreign policy by decrying Mr. Harrison's.

Spectacles on School Children.

It is a curious fact that even in the poorest parts of New York spectacles are more mon than shabby garments among school children. Some folks cry out against putting tots in spectacles, but before the practice was so common many school children underwent torture unsuspected by their elders. A supposed dull and stubborn boy, on being taken to an oculist, was ound to be in such condition that the oculist wondered how the child had managed to make the pretense of learning his lessons. His eyes had been from infancy unable to do the work that grown folks had tried to exact from them.

Sales of stocks were 149,900 shares. While New England was the leading stock in Saturday's speculation on the Stock Exchange and took up one-third of the dealings, there was a fairly active and welldistributed business in the rest of the list. The trading was on the bear side of the market, but the shorts did a little covering, which checked the downward tendency at frequent intervals and served to indicate that the short interest was not prepared to leave out very long lines over the Christmas holidays. The London Stock Exchange being closed until next Wednesday kept the arbitrage houses out of the market, confining the speculation to purely local lines. There were both selling and buying orders in New England from Boston, but the former largely outnumbered the latter, and a prominent broker said to be acting for persons usually well informed as to the company's affairs, was a large seller of New England. When it became known that a directors' meeting Friday had appointed Messrs, interest, thus confirming the McLeed, Prince, Armstrong and Ervin a committee to raise the $200,required to meet the January belief that money had not yet been obtained, there was a rush to sell the stock, which became more pronounced when it was rumored that the opposition company had obtained centrol of New England's floating debt with the object of forcing a receivership. Under combined sales of long stock and for the short account the shares broke 4% per cent. amid considerable ex-citement. The lower range of values induced some buying, which resulted in a recovery of 1%, followed by a reaction of 14, and a final rally of 1 per cent. The loss on the day was 2% per cent. The only other stock the sales of which reached 10,000 shares was Western Union, which, after advancing % at the opening, declined 14, closing at a recovery of %. A drive was made on Distilling, which sent it down 2% per cent., being based on alleged advices from Washington that the ways and means committee had not yet definitely decided to increase the spirit tax. When the pressure to sell was removed the shares quickly rallied and closed 15% above the lowest point touched. Atchison was held pretty steadily throughout the day, at one time being % higher than the closing figure of yesterday, then reacting %, and then recovering to and closing at yesterday's price. There was a general rally in the final dealngs, and the market closed firmer but 14 s lower on the day, the latter New England and 1% in Tobacco and Pittsburg and C., C., C. & St. L. preferred. BLOOD ON THE MOON. A Louisville Reporter Beholds Strange and Boozy Sight.

Louisville Commercial. Blood on the moon! This rare sight was witnessed last night by many citizens of Louisville, much to their edification. In some quarters the sight caused great excitement. The phenomenon did not last over an hour, but while it existed it was the center of attraction for many a pair of eyes. For many of those that saw the abnormal reflection from Luna it caused a feeling of ill portent. Upon the minds of the superstitious it wrought great effect of a de-pressing and fearful nature. Many shuddered as they viewed the crescent in the Western sky, marked by a broad band of blood-red color until it sunk in the horizon Even then the awe that the unwonted sight had caused still affected them as they asked each other what did it mean and what did it presage if not evil.

As soon as it became dark enough ast evening for the moon to become visible, which was about 6:45 o'clock, it appeared in the Western sky at an elevation of about thirty-five degrees. By 7 o'clock the eyes of many pedestrians had become riveted upon the quarter moon. Well might they stare, for a band of crimson straight across its middle, illumined by the reflected lunar light, formed a ghastly foil to the paleness of the horns of the crescent A reporter was passing Third and Chestnut streets shortly after 7 o'clock last evening when an acquaintance turned his attention down Chestnut street, "Look at the blood on the moon," he said in a hoarse whisper. Not far above the horizon could be seen the moon with a scarlet sash. It was very distinct, and the redness of it was awful. A slight haze about the moon, glimmering in emphasized the ribbon of red. than one passer-by stopped to look and wonder. Groups gathered on the street corners and discussed the phenomenon in whispers. Clerks ran out of the few Chestnut-street stores to gaze at the mystery and then ran in to put on their heavy wear and rushed out to look longer. The omen was viewed with more than interest till the moon sunk below the horizon, carrying its badge of red to terrify others more remote. Down about Ninth, Tenth and Eleventh and Chestnut streets, many negroes noticed the moon. The effect on them was one of terror. All regarded it as a sign of approaching fatalities, bloodshed, pestilence and death. Many rushed to their homes and locked themselves in. Excitement was at a high pitch. Old people of the race told how they had seen similar signs in their youth, and remarked that evil always followed close The display did not last longer than o'clock, when the moon disappeared behind the horizon. Speculation as to the cause of the condition of the moon was much indulged in, but always ended unsatisfactorily. Scientists have failed to account for the phenomenon, and so it has become a popular superstition that the display foretells war and misfortune generally. Several men in discussing the matter made guesses as to what would follow as the result of the blood on the moon. One thought there would be a strike on the L. & N., another suggested the finances of the world would go to wreck. "It's Hawail," said another. "The Parkland Council meets next Monday," said another. "It's an omen of joy," said one hopeful citizen. "The deadlocks will be broken pretty soon right off." American Vandals Abroad.

Boston Transcript. Rae's "Modern Egypt" has one paragraph which American travelers ought to heed: "American visitors to Egypt are accounted the best patrons of Egyptian body snatchers. They are glad to return home with a mummy; they are proud to have their friends see it unrolled; they bury their own dead with surpassing care, placing them in caskets within splendid tombs. It might seem as if, with Ulysses in Hecuba, they were recompensed for lives of struggle by reposing under noble monuments. A cemetery in America is generally the most beautiful adjunct to a city. Would not the cultured citizens of Boston shudder if told that a day might come when Mount Auburn would be treated as a mine in which shafts were sunk and levels driven in order to discover human remains and bring them to the surface, there to be sold to strangers from beyond the sea in quest of curiosities, or else to be put on exhibition at home?"

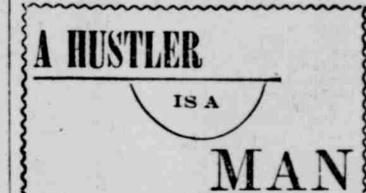

He Married Her.
